

Jacob Stilman moves to new office that's inviting for clients

Toronto criminal lawyer Jacob Stilman has moved to a new office that is comfortable and inviting, as well as well-situated to attract walk-in clients.

“The new office is a great space — it’s bright and very modern,” he tells AdvocateDaily.com.

“The nice thing is that it’s in a truly mixed-use neighbourhood where there is some commercial but a good deal of residential. It’s nice to feel integrated with a community.”

Stilman, partner at Lo Greco Stilman LLP, says the new office, located just west of Allen Road at 609 Marlee Ave., is right on street-level like a storefront.

“It’s inviting for walk-in traffic, which there will be some of, for sure,” he says.

Stilman moved into the new location earlier this year to position the firm in a neighbourhood setting that will appeal to clients.

“And so far, it has worked out well for us,” he says.

The office offers a spacious boardroom that provides total privacy for clients.

Overall, it is welcoming and warm, a feature Stilman feels will put clients more at ease.

“The space is much more conducive to human interaction — it’s better than our previous office in every respect,” he says.

Stilman was called to the Ontario Bar in 1999 and has a breadth of trial and appellate court experience. He lectures on various legal issues, including substantive and procedural law, and regularly coaches students in competitive mock trial tournaments.

He is pursuing a graduate law degree in Criminal Law and Advocacy through Osgoode Hall Law School’s Professional LLM program.
